Creating the How to Help Page

This page will include boxes where the user can input their information to learn more about Alopecia Areata. There will be a "Name", "Email Address", "Phone Number", and "Message" box. The user will be able to enter in their contact details if they want to learn more about Alopecia. If the user submits their info, there will be a link to a website, naaf.org, which is essentially a donation site for patients with Alopecia Areata. At the bottom of the page, I plan to have an email address written down, next to a small mail icon. This email can be used if the viewers have any questions or concerns. At the very bottom of the website, I plan to have a copyright trademark to make the website owned by me, this will make the website look more professional.

To access this portion of the website, the user can click the "How to Help" navigation button at the top of the site.

This code is stored in the "contact" section of the website, meaning all the changes will be made there. First, I create the heading and subtitle to introduce the page and tell the user to input their contact information. Next, I create a text box for the user to input their full name. I also create an error check, where if the user does not input anything into the query, then it will warn them. Then I create a text box for the user to input their email address. I repeated the same steps as for the previous box, however, I also added so that if the user does not input a "@"and a "." character, then it will warn them to input a valid email address. I do the same thing for the "Phone Number" and "Message" text box. Finally, I create a submit button that stores the info the user imputed into an empty document. Once the submit is clicked, a link to NAAF will appear. Below that, I also create a "mail" icon with the email address.

This is the final piece of code to end off the website, it includes the copyright trademark and a few plug-ins that are pre-made by professional creators, in this case, I used the plug-ins provided by "StartBootstrap". These are included to make the website run.
