Creating the About Page

This will be a summary of what Alopecia Areata is, and why it is a concerning issue. I will include all the necessary information the readers need to know to begin reading my website. In addition, I will add a picture and a divider on this page to make it look more visually appealing. I plan to have a small lightbulb picture to represent knowledge, and a small divider between the subtitle and description to make it more user-friendly. I will also make use of hyperlinks in the text to make the page more interactive.

To access this portion of the website, the user can click the "About" navigation button at the top of the site.

```
<section class="page-section bg-primary" id="about">

                <img class="about-image" src="assets/img/about/bulb.png" alt="..." />
                <h2 class="text-white mt-0">Alopecia Areata</h2>
                <hr class="divider divider-light" />
                <h5 class="text-white-75 mb-4">Alopecia Areata is an autoimmune disease, meaning that the immune system attacks a part of the body mistakenly. When infected with Alopecia, in the immune system surround and destroy large groups of hair follicles, which leads to hair loss in small patches on the head.
                </h5>

                <h5 class="text-white-75 mb-4">
                    Alopecia is often caused due to a deficiency in Vitamin D, as it weakens the immune system and causes the loss of hair follicles. There are several ways to tell if you are infected by Alopecia Areata, and how you can prevent yourself and others from contracting it.
Although Alopecia can cause full hair loss in less than a month, there are often ways to naturally regrow the hair follicles with the help of topical and oral medications.
                </h5>

                <h5 class="text-white-75 mb-4">
                    An autoimmune disease makes it so the body's natural defense system is unable to tell the difference between its own cells and foreign cells, causing the body to mistakenly attack healthy cells. Alopecia Areata falls in this group, which is why it is hard to find a guaranteed treatment. Most autoimmune diseases, including Alopecia, can generally affect many types of tissues and nearly any organ in your body, making it hard to treat it efficiently. For example, with Alopecia Areata, you might get severe hair loss in all parts of your body, which will make it hard to grow it back in all parts of your body.
```
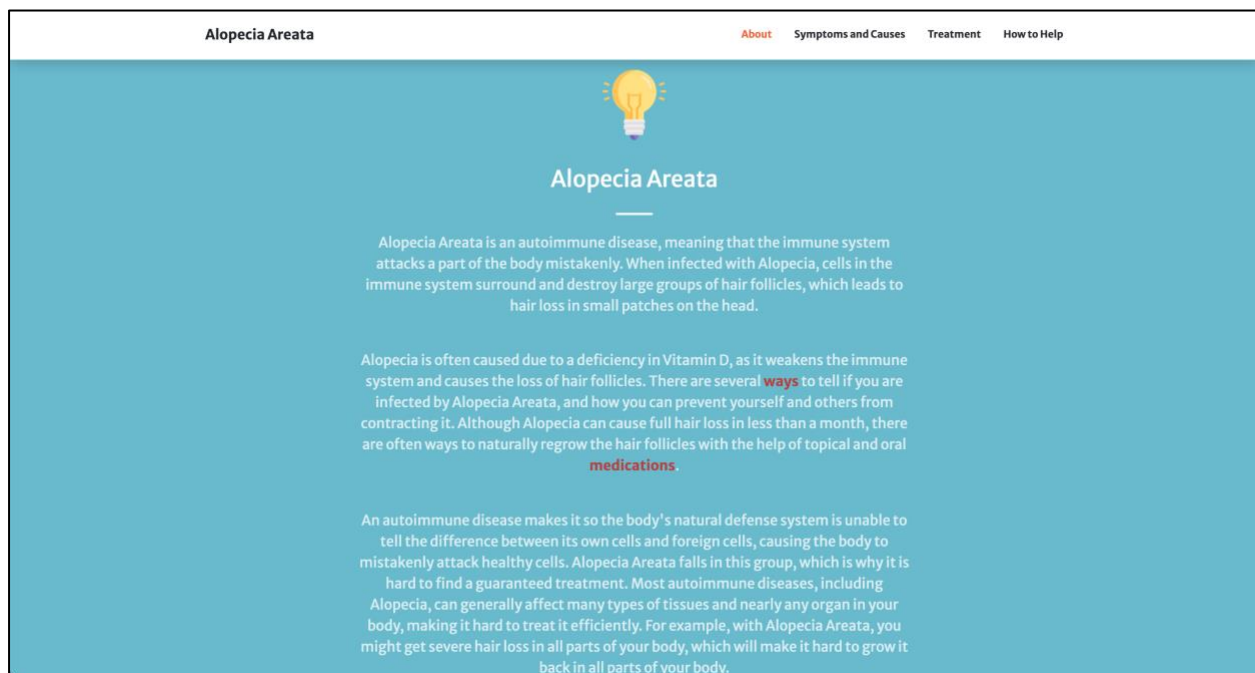

```
                    </h5>

    </section>
```

This code is stored in the "about" section, so all the changes will be made there. First, we import the lightbulb image, the actual file of the image is stored in the same directory as the code. Next, we create the subtitle, and add a small divider underneath it. We then put all the information about Alopecia on the page. Note: the code, "" prints a one-line space between the two pieces of text.

Output:

If the user clicks the "ways" on the text, it will redirect them to the "Symptoms and Causes" page. If "medications" is clicked, it will redirect them to the "Treatment" page.